

Four iconic plants/trees of Southeast Botanical Gardens

Alexander palm-lined street

Alexander palm can only be grown in greenhouses in mainland Japan, but here you can enjoy the amazing sight of a number of them growing straight up toward the heavens. This palm-lined street is also a popular spiritual spot.

Can grow up to 25 meters!

Dragon blood trees

As its name implies, the dragon blood tree produces a dark red resin that is referred to as dragon's blood. We provide you with the rare opportunity to see a grove of dragon blood trees without going to their natural habitat.

Baobab

Za baobab, originating in Madagascar, can be found at Southeast Botanical Gardens. The leaves are eaten as a vegetable and the roots are used as a medicine and no part of the tree is wasted; za baobab is known as the "treasure tree."

Flowering season: from late May throughout early July, with peak blooming in June

Lotus

Lotus starts to bloom as soon as Okinawa enters its rainy season and the large pond becomes covered with white and pink lotus flowers.
